

MEDICAL FACULTIES

one university, five faculties, endless possibilities

Numbers ≠ prestige. Medicine was one of the four pillars of sciences taught at Charles University since its foundation in 1348. In 1945, the Faculty of Medicine expanded into the East and West Bohemia, establishing its two local branches in Pilsen and Hradec Králové respectively. Soon after, in 1953, the Prague faculty was split in three, each focusing on a different field: stomatology, paediatrics, and hygiene. Nowadays, our five medical faculties all offer studies in General Medicine with Dentistry being available in all of the three university cities. Each faculty provides unique student experience, accommodating diverse needs and preferences of any applicant.

SOCIAL SCIENCES, LIBERAL ARTS & HUMANITIES

Psychology, foreign languages and literatures, law, social work, education, or fine and performing arts... These are just some of the most requested fields by our applicants. So far, most of them are available in Czech language only, therefore requiring the applicant to be familiar with the Czech language first. Fortunately, our in-house language and preparatory courses are available to overcome this barrier. Importantly then, a range of English-taught 'soft' academic fields is available at Charles University mainly at the two following faculties.

FACULTY OF HUMANITIES

The term “liberal arts” derives from the Medieval Latin artes liberales – artes meaning “subjects of study,” and liberales meaning “proper to free persons.” At the medieval European universities, “liberal arts” referred to the seven branches of learning considered suitable for freemen: grammar, logic, and rhetoric (i.e. trivium), leading to a Bachelor of Arts; and arithmetic, geometry, astronomy, and music (i.e. quadrivium), leading to the Master of Arts.

Nowadays, our undergraduate programme Liberal Arts and Humanities include the study of anthropology, sociology, psychology, philosophy, history, gender, and arts. The multidisciplinary 3-year long curriculum provides strong foundation for students with diverse needs and prospects. After receiving comprehensive insight into various fields, discourses, and methodologies during the first year, students start to specialise in their own individual academic pathways. With the possibility to get extra 20 credits per year, graduates can pursue their further studies even at US universities, albeit they usually choose to continue in Prague.

FACULTY OF SOCIAL SCIENCES

With the backdrop of the falling Berlin Wall on November 8, 1989, the faculty was founded still under the Czechoslovakian banner right in 1990. On January 1, 1993, Czechoslovakia was peacefully divided in two independent states: Czechia and Slovakia, hereby creating the independent state of the Czech Republic. These days, 20 years has passed since Czechia joined European Union and became the strategic site of the entire region.

The faculty offers four distinct undergraduate programmes which are a genuine reflection of the history within the innovative and ever-evolving Central European context, making them incredibly relevant: Economics and Finance; History and Area Studies; Politics, Philosophy and Economics; and Social Sciences. Intertwined with ongoing real world issues, the faculty serves as a strong platform for students of today who are eager to engage in critical and applicable research. Each programme presents the students with a unique opportunity to explore interdisciplinary perspectives of multiple social sciences at once.

- The Faculty of Arts currently does not offer any undergraduate study programme in English.
- The Faculty of Education offers eight different combinations of English Language, Music Education, Playing Instrument, and Choral Singing.
- The Faculty of Law currently does not offer any undergraduate study programme in English.
